The Human Animal Bond for Differently Abled People and Pets

This issue delves into the world of handi-capable pets and the people who have gained a new lease on life because of them.

It is common knowledge that having pets in your life has the potential to make you happier. It has even been medically proven that the simple act of petting an animal lowers our heart rates and calms us down. If our pets provide such joy for us, imagine what they can do for people who deal with physical, emotional, or health-related obstacles?

Our feature article and supplemental sections, including the Top Ten Pet Assistants, provide inspirational reading on how being differently abled strengthens the human animal bond, for people and pets alike.
